The 4th of October is New Zealand Grandparents Day which is all about celebrating the grandparents of New Zealand. It is a day that celebrates all the joy and value that Grandparents bring to the lives of Kiwi kids. Whether they be Grandparents by blood, or Grandparents by love, we celebrate them. As this is during the holidays we will celebrate this day on the 24th.

Whānau homework task for the holidays – the homework is to think and talk about thinking. It's mainly a talking-about-it-with-someone-else kind of homework for our ākonga. They will need to work with at least one other person at home. Three homework questions about thinking:

- How will it help me if I get to be a really good thinker?
- What things will I need to get good at to be a really good thinker?
- How will I know that I am getting to be a really good thinker?

With the help of someone at home, write down what you decide. Back at school, everyone will share their ideas and we will decide what thinking competencies our school should be helping everyone to learn and use.
